Long ago, two small towns sat on opposite sides of a deep river. They needed each other. One town had wheat. The other had wood. But the two towns did not get along. They had a long disagreement about an old fishing spot. One day, a baker from one town carried fresh bread across a thin path of stones. She gave a warm loaf to the children of the other town. The children laughed and ate. Their parents came out. Soon the two towns sat together and talked. They decided to share the fishing spot on different days. They built a real bridge that summer — a bridge of wood and wheat and kind words.
