In a faraway village, a girl named Mara lived with her stepmother. Mara worked from sunrise to sunset. She washed, she cooked, she swept. Her stepmother gave her only rice and water. One night, a tired old woman knocked on the door. The stepmother sent her away. But Mara crept out and gave the old woman half of her own rice. "You have a strong heart, child," the old woman whispered. She pressed a small wooden bird into Mara's hand. "If you ever need a friend, just whistle." Years later, when Mara's life grew darker, she remembered the wooden bird. She whistled. A bright bird appeared and led her to the kind family who would become her own.
