Passage 1 · The Relay Race

On field day, Sam's class ran a relay race. In a relay, a team of four runners take turns. Each runner carries a short stick called a baton. The first runner sprints and then hands the baton to the next runner. That runner runs and hands it off again. The team that gets the baton across the finish line first wins. Sam was the third runner on his team. He was nervous about dropping the baton. His teammates told him not to worry. "Keep your hand open and look back," said Mia. "We will place it right in your hand." When the race began, Sam's heart raced. The first two runners did their part. Then the baton was in Sam's hand. He held it tight and ran as fast as he could. He passed it to the last runner, who flew across the line. Sam's team did not come in first, but they had a clean race. No one dropped the baton. They had worked as one team.

Passage 2 · Rowing as One

A rowing boat called a crew boat can hold many rowers. Each rower holds one long oar and pulls it through the water. To move fast, the rowers cannot just pull whenever they want. They must all pull at the very same time. If one rower is too early and another is too late, the boat rocks and slows down. So the crew has a leader called the coxswain. The coxswain sits at the back and faces the rowers. This person does not row. Instead, the coxswain calls out the beat, saying "Pull... pull... pull," so everyone moves together. The rowers also cannot see where they are going, because they face backward. The coxswain steers and watches the course. A good crew looks like one big machine. All the oars dip and lift at the same moment. The boat glides forward in a smooth, straight line. Rowing teaches that a team is fastest when every member moves as one.

Passage 3 · The Pit Crew

In a car race, the driver gets all the cheers. But the driver could not win without a team called the pit crew. During a long race, a car must stop for fresh tires and more fuel. This quick stop is called a pit stop. The car pulls into a special lane, and the pit crew rushes out. Each worker has one job. One person lifts the car with a jack. Others pull off the old tires and push on new ones. Another adds the fuel. They all work at the same time, not one after the other. A pit stop can take less than fifteen seconds. That is faster than you can tie your shoes! If even one worker is slow, the whole stop takes longer, and the driver loses the lead. So the crew practices over and over until each move is smooth. The driver may cross the finish line, but the pit crew helps win the race.

Passage 4 · The Ancient Games

More than two thousand years ago, the people of ancient Greece held a great sports festival called the Olympic Games. Every four years, athletes traveled from many cities to compete. They ran races, threw the discus, jumped, and wrestled. The Games were so important that cities at war would stop fighting so athletes and fans could travel safely. This was called a truce. Winners did not get gold medals as they do today. Instead, a champion was crowned with a wreath made from the leaves of an olive tree. The wreath was simple, but it brought great honor. A winner became a hero back home. Some events needed teamwork. In one race, riders drove chariots pulled by four horses. The driver had to guide all four horses as a team around the track. If the horses did not work together, the chariot could crash. Today's Olympic Games began again long after the ancient ones, but they still bring the world together through sports.
